ISA. LIX. V. 7, 8.

V. 7. Their feet run to evil, and they make haste to shed innocent blood : Their thoughts are thoughts of iniquity ; wasting and destruction are in their paths.

V. 8. The way of peace they know not, and there is no judgment in their goings ; they have made them crooked paths ; whosoever goeth therein, shall not know peace.

THE Prophet seems, in these Words, to have chiefly intended a Description of some Revolting and Apostatizing Jews, who forsaking the True Worship of God, had sunk into all the Sins and corruptions of the Idolatrous Nations : And since Their forsaking the only True God, and embracing a False Religion, is in this Chapter assign'd as the only Cause of God's forsaking them, and by Consequence, of their falling into all the abominable Sins and Barbarities by which he there distinguishes them ; therefore This Prophetick Description will fairly reach beyond its first Design, and will undoubtedly take in and describe the Practices of all who entertain a false Religion, whether they be such as have been bred up in it, or have apostatiz'd from the True.

This Day then, my Brethren, has this Scripture been literally fulfill'd in your Ears ; the Influences of a False and Idolatrous Religion, had fill'd that Country to which most of us here present do belong, with such a Scene of Blood and Cruelty, Wasting and Destruction, as hardly ever appear'd in so many Shapes of Horror, since the World began : And it was owing to God's infinite Mercy alone, that a small Remnant escap'd in a Deluge of such universal Fury ; whose Posterity are now met, to praise the Lord for his Goodness, and to continue the Remembrance of so great a Judgment, and so miraculous a Deliverance to all Generations. That we may never forget whose Feet they were that then were so swift to shed the Blood of so many Thousand Innocents ; to remember that their Thoughts of Iniquity are still full of the same Designs of Wasting and Destruction, if the Lord should give us up into their Hands : That they are utter Strangers to the Ways of Peace, Judgment, and Justice ; and since the Divine Providence has rescued us and our Fathers from the very Jaws of so horrid a Destruction ; that we have all imaginable Care of being againd involv'd in the Snares and Treachery of their Crooked Paths ; and however smooth and fair they may carry it now to us, while the Laws, the Sword, and the Government are on our side ; yet if we suffer our selves to be hoodwink'd, or lull'd asleep by their false Insinuations ; we shall ( but perhaps to late ) find, that whosoever goeth into their Paths, or Measures, shall never know Peace.

From the Words, and from the Occasion of this Solemn Meeting, I shall enarge on these Four following Particulars.

I. That

I. That a False and Idolatrous Religion, does naturally produce Bloodshed, Barbarity, Wasting, and Destruction.

II. I shall describe the Effects of it in a few Instances of Cruelty committed in the dreadful Massacre of this Day.

III. I shall prove, that the Doctrine and Practice of the Church of Rome do allow and justify such Barbarous Massacres, and in particular, they have justified and applauded that of this Day.

IV. I shall make some Inferences from the Whole, which may be of good Use to us, in our present Circumstances.

I. And First, That a False and Idolatrous Religion does necessarily produce Bloodshed, Cruelty, Wasting and Destruction.

That in Fact it has done so, we may be assur'd by looking back almost to the Beginning of the World, and thence tracing it down even to our own Times. The first false Notions of Religion were entertain'd by Cain; what they were particularly, we cannot tell; but they render'd his Sacrifice unacceptable to God; and he to shew his Zeal and Repentment, must embroe his Hands in the Blood of his Brother: This was the first Blood that was ever shed, and 'tis observable, that we read of no Difference, no Animosity between the Brothers, till they went to offer Sacrifice; which Cain, having offer'd with a Heart and Faith not approv'd by God, he must revenge it on Abel, because his Faith and his Religion were so much better.

And when Mankind multiply'd on the Earth, and had corrupted their Ways before the Lord, i. e. had imbib'd wrong Notions of God, and fallen from the Truth of his Religion and Worship, then the Thirst of Blood and Cruelty increas'd with their false Principles; and Murder and Destruction were some of the most crying Sins, which brought the Flood upon the World of the Ungodly. And this was a Truth so universally known, and handed down to Posterity, that even Ovid in his Poetical History of the Deluge, ascribes it entirely to the Cruelty and Inhumanity which then obtain'd in the World. And in the first Ages after the Deluge, when Satan had so far prevail'd, as to establish the Worship of himself throughout the greatest Part of the Earth; and had introduc'd his Inferior Rabble of Wicked Spirits to be ador'd as his Courtiers and Favourites; we find that no Sacrifice was acceptable to him, or them, but what was mix'd with Human Blood: And so far had he prevail'd with Men against all the Ties of Nature, Affection and Humanity as to make them offer their very Children, to make their Sons and Daughters pass thro' the Fire to Molech. And if we descend lower to the more Polite and most Civiliz'd Part of the Heathen World; yet even among them we shall find the same Effects of Idolatry, and Superstition: and all the solemn Rites of their false Worship, still perform'd by spilling the Blood of Men. The Romans are justly accounted the Wisest, as well as the Mightiest of all the Heathen Nations; and yet so far had the Mis of a false Religion blinded the Eyes of that otherwise great People, that nothing ever yet appear'd under Heaven, so ridiculous, so lewd, and withal so inhumanly cruel, as the Solemn and Sacred Rites of their Worship. The Adoration of some of their Deities, and those of the first Form too, was such a monstrous mixture of Filthiness and Barbarity, that the very Meanest of the Nations, which they subdu'd, had no Parallel to. And what could be expected better from a People, who had chosen and infranchis'd the False Gods of all the Nations they knew? It was consonant to such a Superstition, and the necessary Result of it, to have the Combats of Gladiators, and the tearing Men in Pieces by wild Beasts, the only Pleasure and Pastime of the highest as well as the commonest People among them.

But we need not have Recourse to Antiquity to prove, that in Fact, wherever the Devil is worship'd, his Votaries must pay him their Homage in Rivers of Blood: Some among us have been conversant with the Infidel Nations that remain at this Day, and most of us have read of their Customs, Manners, and Rites of Religious Worship; and what One of them is there, that does not sacrifice Numbers of Men to their abominable Idols? And to mention One only, instead of many more, we are told by most Historians, who have writ of the Discovery of America, and the Conquest of Montezuma by the Spaniards, that the Temple in which this Indian Prince ador'd his false Gods; was found, up to the Knees, deep in Human Gore: So vast a Number of wretched Men had been slain to pacify the great Destroyer of Mankind: And it had been happy for that unfortunate People, and done some Credit to our common Christianity, had the Popish Conquerors been less Blood-thirsty than the Indian Deities; but where these had only Streams to wanton in, the Popish Christian wallow'd in Seas of Blood. 'Tis needless to insist longer on a Truth, which is so well known to all Travellers, and to which every Man, who has read either Sacred or Prophane History, must subscribe.

But that which must astonish an inquisitive Man, is, How and by what means do these Inhuman Butcheries happen? Why, of all the Creatures that God has made, is Man so bent upon Destroying his own Kind? Is this that Reason and Judgment, which has set him above the rest of his Fellow-Creatures here below? No certainly: But 'tis the sad Abuse of that Reason and Judgment, by suffering them to be stifled with the gross Absurdities of a False Religion. Man is not by Nature dispos'd to Bloodshed, War and Destruction, however Mr. Hobbs has new moulded him: For no doubt, Man in a meer State of Nature would prove as Tender and Careful of his own Species, as the Brutes are; and to deny this, is to sink him below the Beasts. But we need no Concessions to prove, That Human Nature in it self, starts and shrinks at the Thought of basely taking away the Life of a Man: And 'tis allow'd by all Men, That Murder, or the Destruction of Mankind by each other, is horridly Unnatural; the Thought in it self, divested of Justice, Passion or Revenge, chills the Blood, and sets Nature it self out of Course: How therefore can that be the true State of Nature, which is confessedly Unnatural? The Imagination whereof does Violence to Nature, and puts the whole Man into Disorder and Confusion. It is not therefore from Man, consider'd in the pure
State

State of Nature, that we are to search for the Original of this Destructive and Blood-thirsty Disposition; but 'tis from Man acted by a Superior Principle, by the Notions of Religion, which he has imbib'd, and by an implicit Obedience to which, he is capable of Extinguishing the Light of Nature and Reason, and of Overturning a First Principle; viz. The Preservation of himself, and of those of the same Kind.

Now 'tis plain, That a Religion taught by the God of Truth and Mercy, can never produce such Disorderly and Unnatural Effects: He that endu'd us with Reason, can never put that Reason quite out, by any other Light: He may give us a Light to guide us further than bare Reason can do, but never absolutely to contradict it. If the Light of a Candle shews me a Man, or a Picture, the Sun may shew me some Lines or Colours in each, which I did not see before; but can never convince me, that I saw neither Man nor Picture. And if God has given me Reason, which convinces me that I ought to preserve Mankind; no Religion coming from him, can make me believe that I ought to destroy them: And if this Principle of Preservation be a Dictate of Nature, 'tis therefore the Law of God written in Man's Heart, which no pretended After Law can annul.

But alas, this Reasoning is not necessary; for 'tis plain, that Almighty God has no where in his Divine Revelation, said any thing to cancel the Law of Nature; and so far is he from Countenancing the Destruction of Man, that all his Revelations do either directly, or by consequence, tend the Security of Mens Lives, and to all the Duties and Offices of Love, Compassion and Justice, by which Men can support and comfort one another. God is Love; and has convinc'd Mankind that he is so, by innumerable Acts of Mercy: How then can he be the Author of so Barbarous a Religion, as is inconsistent with his own Attributes? For the Love of God, and the Necessity of Destroying Mankind in Obedience to him, is a Contradiction. That Religion therefore, which teaches that 'tis Meritorious to shed the Blood of Man; and makes it necessary so to do, in order to assert and vindicate some pretended Article of Faith; and gives Men a Liberty in this way to impose their own Notions on the World; This Destructive Religion is certainly from the Devil, the great Enemy of Mankind, whose implacable Malice to them is then most Triumphant, when he can engage them in perpetual Murders and Destruction, and by consequence in Advancing his Dominion. Since then, there is but one Religion true, and that comes from the God of Truth; and since the whole Multitude of False Religions do all proceed from the Father of Lies; however these False ones may differ among themselves, they must all necessarily agree in this one Point, Of making their Worshippers swift to shed Innocent Blood, and being the only Springs of Wasting and Destruction. For that which the Author of these Idolatrous Religions aims at, is to make Mankind as Guilty and as Wretched as himself; and what way so effectual, so plain to this Wicked Purpose, as that of making it necessary and allowable to them, to endeavour each other's Ruin, both in this World, and the next.

'Tis strange, however, that the Devil can thus impose upon Men with their Eyes open, and who may see, that such Destructive Principles and Practices, do only serve to increase the Number and Power of his Kingdom. That a Man may kill his Neighbour, because he cannot make his Neighbour think as he does; is so wild and so absurd a Notion, that one can hardly imagine it ever sway'd any Man of Reason: And yet this is all that can be said for the Principle of murdering for Religion. Indeed, where a Man pretends to Notions which will destroy Government, and subvert the Fundamentals of Religion; there the Government ought to interpose for the Good and Safety of the whole Body, and rather cut off one rotten Member, than that all should be infected and ruin'd, if no other Method will do. But to give this Power into the Hand of every Man; and make it Lawful to execute it, on whom, and in what manner a Bigotted Zealot thinks fit; This must come from an Infernal Forge, and is one of the most dreadful Weapons that was ever invented, to plague and destroy Mankind. And in every false and Idolatrous Religion, this impious horrid Principle does and must prevail; because it so well answers the Cruel and Mischievous Intentions, which the Father of Lyes has ever been contriving against the Race of Men.

But as every Idolatrous Worship has more or less of this Wicked Notion, so it generally obtains most, when there has been a Corruption of the best Religion. Thus when Ahab and Jezabel had corrupted the Jewish Religion by Idolatry, so hot was the Persecution against the Orthodox Jews; that the Prophet thought he was the only true Worshiper left alive. And thus in that sad Corruption of Christianity, the present Church of Rome, so much stronger is the Idolatry than the faint Remains of Truth; that the Destroying Principle still prevail over all the Obligations of Nature, Justice, and Humanity: Which was most dismally exemplified in the various Scenes of Cruelty and Inhumanity, which began to be acted as on this Day: A few of which I come now to instance; which is the Second Thing I propos'd to speak to.

II. And here indeed, Inhumanity, Cruelty, and Wantonness in Blood, present themselves in so many Shapes of Horror, that they cannot but be insupportable to every Ear, and every Soul not utterly void of Bowels and Compassion: And I ought to apologize to this Audience, for relating such Acts of Barbarity as must give an Uneasiness, and almost freeze the Blood of every one that hears them. But considering that there may be many in this Congregation, utter Strangers to those Judgments which fell so heavily on their Neighbours, and others who may be too apt to forget them; and possibly, some who may deny these Facts; For these Reasons, I shall give a short Account of their Cruelties, and then leave it to each of you to judge of that Religion, which was occasion'd, encourag'd, and justify'd them.

At the time when this Unnatural Rebellion broke out, it was most observable, that the British Protestants liv'd in the utmost intimacy, and Friendship, and Confidence with their Papist Neighbours: All Offices of mutual mutual Civility pass'd between them; and the Old Animosities of former Rebellions so far worn out, that they enter'd into New Alliances with the deepest Security; and frequent Marriages (too frequent by far) were contracted with them: And so far were the Papists from being any way provok'd by Ill Usage from Protestants, that they had all the Advantages of the Laws equal with them, their Lives and Properties equally secur'd; many of that Religion then Sitting in both Houses of Parliament; their Interest at Court as good; their Applications thither as Successful, if not more so; and in a word, the free and open Exercise of their Religion, without Danger or Interruption. In many Places they had Convents of their Fryars, and every thing that they could desire, except the Protestant Churches in their Hands, and the Hereticks quite extirpated from them. And yet in this Sunshine of Ease and Prosperity, the Papists had for several Years before been Plotting and Contriving this Dismall Fate for their Innocent Neighbours, which at length overtook so many of them in so horrid a manner, that had all the Inhabitants of Hell been let loose at once upon them, they could not have invented stranger Deaths, nor with more wanton, various, unheard-of Torments. But the very Day that this Dreadful Storm was to have fallen on the Head of every Protestant Soul; a Day which they fix'd on as Sanctify'd for so Holy a Purpose, by its being dedicated to Ignatius Loyola, the infamous Founder of the Jesuits; it pleas'd our Good God to put it into the Heart of one of their own Nation, but bred up in a much better Religion, to discover their Hellish Design, within a few Hours before it was to have been executed: And by preventing the Castle and City of Dublin from being seiz'd, there was one Place of Security left, and a Refuge which, by a Miraculous Providence, sav'd the Lives of all the Poor Protestants who escap'd the Fury of the Murderers. For had that Fortrefs fallen into their Hands, it is not possible to conceive, without an extraordinary Providence, how one Man of the whole Number of Protestants could have escap'd their Hands. And tho' this Discovery was the most seasonable that ever happen'd, for the Preservation of many Thousands, yet it came too late to hinder the Destruction of far greater Numbers, who perish'd in the general Ruin.

And had the Papists been content barely to take away the Lives of so many Innocents, and to give them a speedy Death, the Helple's Sufferers would have accounted their Cruelties for Tender Mercies: But of that vast Number whom they Butcher'd, the greatest part fell by the most Accurate, Ingenious, and Lingring Torments, that Irish Malice and Popish Religion could Invent. To have in that Cold Season of the Year, great Multitudes stript Naked, and expos'd to a miserable Death by Cold and Hunger: This was one of their mildest Methods of Murdering. To shut up Numbers in Houses and Barns, with promise of Relief and Safety to them; and then to set them on fire, and burn them all together. To drive whole Herds like Beasts; and after the same Religious Oaths pass'd to them, to force them on Bridges which they had before broke down, that they might perish by Hundreds at once in the Water. These were some of their most Merciful Means of Destroying. But when they come to shew the genuine Effects of their Bigotry, it would stagger the Belief of any Man, if the Facts had not been attested by the most solemn and undeniable Evidence.

To wanton in the Death of young Infants, and keep them as long as they could in Dying; to Toss them upon their Pikes, and to set on their own young Brood to Torture and Kill the Protestant Children: To rip up Women with Child, and throw the Living Infants to Dogs and Swine; To force Women in Labour out of their Beds and Houses; and to make them drop their Burthens in the face of the Sun; and then to drag them on the Roads, till they dy'd in that inhuman dismal Condition. To have the Guts of Men pull'd out, while they were living, and to force them to run or walk, till they had measur'd the full Length of them. To cut the Flesh of Men off alive, and broil it, and then force the Wretches themselves to eat it. To wound some in such a manner, as to disable them to help themselves; and then to leave them to eat the Grass and the Earth, and at last their own Flesh: To bury alive great Numbers, and some only to their Chins or Necks; and so leave them to dye in the utmost Anguish. To fasten Men and Women in Stocks; and then send young Children to gore, and stab, and beat them to Death. To promise Life and Security to such as would Abjure their Religion; and when thro' Fear and Infirmity they had comply'd, then to murder them, that they might dye in a good Religion. These were some of the Shapes of Horror and Amazement, in which the Power of Popish Bigottry shew'd it self, towards a People innocent and secure; and to whom they had no Pretence of Quarrel, but that they were of a Religion which abhors and detests such Execrable Practices.

Ince'd at the first, the Lord Justices of that Kingdom try'd all the Means they could to persuade the Popish Lords of the Pale, who were Descendants of the old English Conquerors; that it was a Rebellion of the Irish, in order to root out all of the English Nation, and ventur'd a most dangerous Experiment to convince them of it: For they sent both Arms and Commissions to these Lords, who then threw off the Mask, and having the Power in their Hands, shew'd that Religion alone was the Quarrel; and turned those very Arms to the Destruction of the Protestants, which were trusted to them, and which they promis'd to use for their Defence; but they were under the Influences of a False Religion, and prov'd at last more Bloody Enemies, than even the Original Irish themselves. Neither were they wanting in their Stratagems to divide the Protestants, even at that time; for they persuaded the Scottish Protestants, that they had no Design against them; but only to root out their old Enemies, the English; and so far they gain'd Credit with them by their solemn Lies, and Perjuries, that they became secure, and took no Measures for their own Preservation; but they paid dear for their easy Credulity; for as soon as they had made an end of the English, they fell on the Scots in the same barbarous Manner, and destroy'd great Numbers of them with the same Arts of Cruelty, and Perfidiousness, that they had us'd to the Englist. And that nothing Heretical might remain among them, they burnt many Houſes of Proteſtants, the Owners whereof they had before murder'd, and kill'd Abundance of Cattel; which they left in the Fields to the Dogs and the Fowl, to no End, nor for any other Reason, but that they were the Cattel of Hereticks. But I have detain'd you too long on a Subject of ſo much Horror and Barbarity, and which muſt be ſhocking to every Hearer, not harden'd with Romiſh Zeal and Bigotry. I ſhall only add, that I have repreſented nothing in this Diſcourſe of the Facts againſt them, but what has been prov'd and attested by the Oaths of ſeveral very credible and unexceptionable Perſons: And by the ſame Evidence, and upon the beſt Authority it appears, That in the ſpace of about three Months, from this Memor.able Day the 23d of October, They had ſlaughter'd no leſs than One Hundred and Fifty Four Thouſand Innocents in cold Blood: And by the Confeſſions of thoſe who ſuffer'd for this Maſſacre, (for ſome of the Inſtruments were brought to Conſign Punishment) the Deſign was Univerſal, the Whole Body of Iriſh Papiſts were concern'd in it; and had not the Lord in Mercy mov'd the Heart of Connelly to diſcor it, every Proteſtant of that Kingdom muſt have dy'd by their cruel Hands; and all had been thought a Sacrifice little enough to appeaſe the Angry Deity at Rome. Thus much of the Second Thing I propos'd.

III. I come now in the Third Place to prove, That the Doctrine and Practice of the Church of Rome, do allow and juſtify theſe Barbarous Maſſacres, and particularly that of this Day.

It were eaſy to aſſign infinity Quotations from their beſt Cauiſts, and moſt eminent Doctōrs, to prove the Truth of this Aſſertion; but to all theſe they answer, That theſe are the Opinions of private Men, and not the Senſe of the Church; yet with their Leave, the Church ſtands juſtly chargeable with thoſe Opinions, till by ſome Publick Acts it diſavows and cendemns them. But we need not have Recourſe to private Doctōrs for the Truth of this, the Church of Rome has done and ſaid enough to explain her own Meaning. The Roman Breviary in the Office of St. Peter's and St. Paul's Feſtival, aſſerts, That God has given to the Pope, All the Kingdoms of the Earth; in Purſuance of which, He has ever ſince been filling them with Blood and Confuſion. Does He not exerciſe the Power of abſolving Subjects from their Allegiance, and arming them againſt their Sovereigns, and againſt each other, when the Good of the Church requires it; and how oft has this been put in dreadful Execution? Hath not the Council of Lateran damn'd all Hereticks, and are they not ſolemnly curſ'd and given over to the Devil, and to every one elſe, that has a Mind to deſtroy them, Yearly * on Maundy-Thurſday. And agreeable to this, has not a Canon of the Church put it into the Power of every Ruſſian, to murder any Excommunicated Perſon? The very Title of the † Canon is; Non ſunt Homicide qui adverſus Excommunicatos Zelo

Matriæ Ecclesiæ armantur ; i. e. They are no Murderers who kill Men out of Zeal for their Mother the Church. Does not the Roman Pontifical, in the Office for Consecration of a Bishop, oblige them all to swear, that they will root out Hereticks and all that favour them, to the utmost of their Power ? Are these the Opinions of private Doctors ? Is not the Inquisition Court set up by the Authority of that Church ; and is it design'd for any other End than the Destruction of Hereticks, and the Pouring out Rivers of Blood by a Law ? Has not all the Blood that has been shed in Europe, for some Hundreds of Years past, on the Account of Religion, been owing to the Principles, and Violence of that Church ? Did not a General Council, as they esteem it, that of Constance, solemnly murder John Hus and Jerom of Prague, two eminent Protestants, for Heresy, after the Publick Faith past to them for Safety ? And that upon this Principle, That no Faith was to be kept with Hereticks. Who arm'd the Leaguers in France against their King, and occasion'd so many Slaughters and Destructions in that Kingdom ? Were not the Popes and their Instruments, the only Authors of it ? And when ( as an Effect of that League ) a desperate Zealot had murder'd the King, does not the Pope make a Panegyrick upon it, admires the Glorious Action, and compares it for its Goodness to the Incarnation of Christ ? And this Speech afterwards printed by Authority of the Holy See in Paris, Anno 1589. Where was the Gun-Powder Treason of this Kingdom hatch'd, but in Rome ? Was it not Blessed and Sanctified by the Pope ? Was not Garnet, one of the chief Conspirators, canoniz'd, and made a Martyr at Rome ? Was not another of them made the Popes Pænitentiary, and another a Confessor in St. Peter's at Rome. Who were the Authors of all the Treasons and Conspiracies, that disturb'd the Glorious Reign of Queen Elizabeth ? Who absolv'd her Subjects from their Allegiance, and animated so many of them, basely to attempt her Life ; to which under God's Providence, we owe the Establishment of the Reformation ? Are not the Bulls and Orders from Rome, for these pious Purposes, still upon Record ? But it would be endless even to mention the infinite Stirs, Bloodsheds, and Confusions, which that Holy Cause, the Setting up the Pope above all the Powers in Earth, has occasion'd.

To all this, They retort upon us, the Unnatural Rebellion and Civil War under the Reign of the Blessed King Charles the First. As to this, 'tis sure, that we of the Establish'd Church have nothing to answer for : And I doubt not, but those of the Separation, would have had much less, if it were not for the Intrigues and Cabals, and Emissaries of the Church of Rome : Did not Sir William Boswel, his Majesties Ambassador at the Hague, discover a Plot of the Jesuits, to exasperate the King against his Subjects, and them to fill with Jealousies against Him ; to stir up the Scots to rebel, whose Solemn League and Covenant, was form'd on the Model the Popish French League ? Had they not Fifty Scots Jesuits kept at London for that End, under the Direction of the Cardinal Barberine : And were not almost the whole Body of Papists in England, Contributors to the this Meritorious Design? And all this made appear to His Majesty then Residing at York. Were there not great Numbers of Papists found in the Army against him? And when by these Hellish Methods, they had brought his Affairs into Extremity, and Himself into the Power of his Enemies; it was then debated in the Consistory at Rome, whether to take off the King's Head for the Good of the Catholick Cause; and carry'd in the Affirmative. But nothing can better evidence the wicked Part, which the Papists bare in that Unnatural War, than the horrid Tragedy of this Day. It was begun by them, just as the King's Affairs began to be embroil'd on this Side: And they had the harden'd Impudence to affirm, that they kill'd by his Authority, and acted under his Commission; and endeavour'd by all base Arts to possess the People of England, that they really were set on by the King: And I may venture to affirm, that this barbarous Forgery which they obruded on some hot and credulous Spirits in England, was the greatest Engine of bringing the King to the Fatal Block; and that if it had not been for this cruel Rebellion, He had never come thither.

And now 'tis time to shew, that it was contriv'd and perpetrated in Obedience to the Commands of the Church of Rome. That it was first manag'd at Rome, and settled in several Convents abroad before it arriv'd at the Plan that was laid and executed in Ireland, is evident from all Accounts of it. That it had the Pope's Benediction, and attended with mighty Indulgences from him, is plain from the Pope's Bull to Owen O'Neal, One of the Bloodiest Actors in that dismal Tragedy; in which Bull He animates him to signalize himself with the Rest of the Catholicks, against the Hereticks; grants him and his Party the Apostolical Benediction, and Plenary Indulgence; and in the following Year 1641. And when in a few Years after, a Pacification of those Troubles was set on Foot, and many of the Irish Papists had submitted and sworn to observe the Articles, the Pope absolves them from their Oath, sent his Nuncio to be their General, exercis'd the Regal Power in his Person, imprison'd and threaten'd all that had agreed to the Pacification, begins the Cruelties afresh, and sets all into a New and Desperate Flame. But all this perhaps the Pope did as a Private Doctor of the Church: Let us see whether the Irish Papists did so understand his Commands. They obey'd him, and executed his Bloody Orders to a Man: Nay, Fryar Walsh owns, that it was a Universal Rebellion of all the Catholicks of Ireland, a very few only excepted: He owns the Forming of the Confederacy, and two Pacifications afterwards agreed to, One in 46, the Other in 43, both scandalously violated by Order from Rome. And to shew, that the Papists acted in Obedience to the Church, and thought they did God, and the Catholick Cause, good Service; some Years after the Restoration, the Popish Clergy assembled in a National Synod in 1666, refus'd to petition the King for Pardon; tho' near 600 of them were then Living, and obedi-

ous to the Penalties of that Rebellion. Indeed, some few of the Clergy and Laity, did agree upon an Aukward Remonstrance to be presented to the King, to give him some Assurance of their future Loyalty. But the whole Number of Church-Men, who subscrib'd, were but Sixty Nine: The Opposers of it, being upwards of Two Thousand; besides all in the Irish Colleges abroad, And of those few who subscrib'd, most of them retracted immediately, as soon as the Pope's Nuncio de Vecchius, had intimated his Displeasure against them for their Subscription. It were easy to prove, that this whole Scene of Blood proceeded entirely from an implicate Obedience to the Church of Rome; but I take any further Proof to be needless, the thing being almost self evident: And as very few of them ever deny'd this to be the Principal Motive, so I believe we have never met wit any of them, who so much as pretended to be sorry and penitent for what Mischiefs they had done. From all which, I presume, 'tis now evident, that the Church of Rome does allow and encourage Massacring, for the sake of the Catholick Cause; and that they did abet and encourage that of this Day, in particular; and thence we may judge of the Truth of that Religion, whose Feet run to evil, and make haste to shed innocent blood; whose thoughts are thoughts of iniquity, and wasting and Destruction are in their paths.

IV. I come now in the Last Place, to make some Inferences from the whole; that we may not be led astray into their crooked paths, nor wander into those ways, wherrin we shall never know peace.

Is Popery then the same thing at this Day, that it was in Forty one? Or has it abated of its Fury and Violence, and is become more mild and tractable? Has there been no Wasting and Destruction since those Days: No Blood drawn for the Advancement of the Catholick Cause, and the Extirpation of the Northern Heresy? Have they repented of all their wicked Slaughters, and abominable Thirst of Human Blood? Have they made use of no Dragoons for the Conversion of Nations? Or have so many Hundred Thousand People run away from their Houses and Livelihoods, through a panick groundless Fear? Have We of Ireland neither felt nor heard any thing since that Time, of their usual Kindness to Protestants? Or did so many of Us run away from our Wit and our Dwellings at once, for no other Cause, but to Travel, and beg the Generous Assistance of our English Neighbours? Whose kind and charitable Entertainment, we can never sufficiently acknowledge. Did we find the Papists such tame, gentle, good-natur'd Creatures at that Time? No certainly: Popery is still the same, and still insupportable from Persecution and Cruelty. Let them but name one Place where It prevails, and the Church can exert its Power; and that Place free from Persecution of those who differ from it, and we shall own them a Merciful People. But also, the Ethiopian cannot change his Skin, nor the Leopard his Spots: They may, and they will at all times till they get us into their Power, strive to deceive us with Jacob's Voice; but we shall at last find that the Hands are the Hands of Esau. One of their own Doctors is so Civil as to tell us, (Ubi desunt Vires) When Bellarm. they have not Strength enough, they are not obliged to destroy us. We thank them for their great Compassion to us; but hope we may never need nor experience it.

And if Popery be not chang'd, how is it that we become every day less Apprehensive of it? Are the Endeavours and Close Practices of that Faction less Busy and Vigorous than they us'd to be? If good Information may be rely'd upon, they are more Numerous and more Industrious; and act their Parts more openly than they have done at any time for several Years past: But we seldom hear of any Danger fear'd, or thought on, from that side. However, they were pleas'd, not many Months since, to awaken us by a sudden and dangerous Alarm: But the Providence of God defeated the Invasion; and being once again deliver'd, our Fears are vanish'd, and Popery with its Concomitants as far from our Thoughts, as if it had never made an Attempt against us, I hope 'tis otherwise in that Kingdom to which most of us belong. That wicked Invasion was so tim'd, as to surprize Ireland in the most Defenceless Condition that it has ever been know for many Years. And tho' at that Juncture the Papists did not openly appear in an Insurrection, yet we know how heartily dispos'd and ready they were for it: We know that a few Months before, a solemn and unusual Fast was enjoyn'd by the Priests to all of that Religion, from 15 Years and upwards; and that for many Days: And all were brought to their Sacraments, Penance, and Confessions. Yet so very close and secret they were, when ask'd the Occasion of such extraordinary Severities, that I never found nor heard of any one of them, who dar'd to tell the true Reason of it; till the Sanctify'd Armada set out from Dunkirk, and then the Mystery of Iniquity was unfolded. Thus it is that they constantly lye in wait for us; and we as constantly grow secure, till the Lord is pleas'd to snatch us as a Firebrand out of the Burning, to shew us the Pit which we were just running into: and when we are in Safety, then to forget both our Danger and our Deliverer.

But if we would in earnest secure our selves and our Posterity, against the growing Danger of Popery; it behoves us to consider the Methods which brought us to the very Brinks of it some few Years ago: and not to expect that God should always work Miracles, and raise us new Deliverers. When we see the same Arbitrary Notions, and Tyrannical Principles, now again become fashionable; and the Press made to justify such Tenets, as are only consistent with the French and Turkish Government: Such as can serve no Ends, but those of a Prince designing to Subvert the Constitution, or to create Fears in the People, that such Designs are on foot, when really there are none: It seems highly reasonable to suppose, that the Authors of them write for a New Revolution, and hope to see us in such Hands, as to have both our Laws and Religion impos'd upon

upon us ; and to have us once more at the Mercy of the Papists, without any Hopes or Prospect of being rescu'd. It looks as if we were infatuated, and were given up to work our own Destruction ; to see the Books and Papers of those Men publicly read and recommended, who have tax'd all that were for the late Happy Revolution, with downright Rebellion ; and upon whose Principles (if true) all must be Rebels. But 'tis still more astonishing, to hear these Men cry'd up for the Champions of the Church, who have arraign'd and condemn'd all the present Members of it for Schism ; and to shew themselves in earnest, do Set up and Maintain their Separate Conventicles. If these be the Men and the Methods by which the Church and State are to be Supported, 'tis easy to imagine how long either is to continue ; and into whose Power Both will fall, if the Providence of God be not kinder to us than we deserve. We may be assur'd, that they who are Enemies to the Revolution, can be no Friends to the Effects of it, the Happiest whereof is, Her Majesty's Wife and Gracious Government over us ; and next to this, the Succession in the Protestant Line : And to fancy that the Interest of either can be heartily maintain'd, by such as have revil'd and condemn'd the Revolution in another Reign ; is indeed, to take away our Senses, and fit us for Transubstantiation. And 'tis probable, they think us tolerably well prepar'd for it already : Since the Sacrament of the Lord's-Supper is maintain'd to be a Proper and Real Sacrifice ; and an Accommodation with the most Jesuited Part of the Church of Rome, propos'd on such Terms, as makes the Reformation precarious and unjustifiable. It is no Surprize to find such Dangerous Paradoxes taught by some Men : But 'tis amazing to see, that such Men teaching such Doctrines, should hope to proselite a Nation. We ought to oppose, as much as in us lies, the Spreading of such Enslaving Principles : And I doubt not, but every one of us who have felt the Influences of them, in another manner than they did here, will beware of being sent back into Egypt again.

Another Method in which the Papists have been most fatally Successful against us, is, by creating Jealousies, and fomenting Divisions among us : This has been their Masterpiece from the Beginning ; and one would hope, that a Stratagem so long made use of, a Snare so often laid, and which has so often catch'd us, almost to our very Ruin, should at length be laid in vain, and be Dangerous to none but to those who dare to make such bold Attempts against us. But 'tis most Melancholy to observe, how unexpectedly Prosperous they are in this Stale Artifice to undo us. Our Divisions and Animosities are now at a higher Pitch than ever. They were formerly so modest, as to keep without the Inclosure ; and only to incense the Separatist against the Churchman : But now they have impudently broke in upon us ; and use all their Arts, to make the Members of the Church divide, and grow jealous one of another. To this end, they have invented a New and Odious Distinction of High and Low Church : Which Terms, if they mean what the Inventors would have meant meant by them, That the one leans towards the Church of Rome, and the other to the Dissenters; I am confident the Distinction is as groundless as 'tis mischievous: And if this be what is generally understood by the Words, (as it certainly is) sure 'tis the Business of both to beat down, and abolish such Terms of Reproach; and not to be fond of such Marks of Distinction, as do but expose us to our Common Enemy. And they will do well to consider, If such Terms are kept up, on which Side the greatest Odiam will fall, the whole Protestant World being Judges. Certainly at this Juncture, when we are engag'd in a War of so much Blood and Destruction abroad, and that against Papists; it were much more for our Interest, and for the Credit and Strength of the Reformation in general, to endeavour to heal and compose our Unhappy Divisions at Home, than to abett or give Countenance to new ones. I would not be mistaken (for some Men are too apt to mistake every Word that's offer'd towards the Healing our Divisions;) I am not for Courting the Dissenters, at the Expence of our Church-Government, Liturgy, or Discipline: Such a Thought cannot enter into the Breast of any true Son of the Church: But sure we ought to treat the greatest part of Dissenters with some Confidence and Affection, as they are embark'd in the same Common Cause against the Papists. We should endeavour to convince them, that our Thoughts of them are quite different from the Notions we have of the Papists; who are the irreconcilable Enemies both of Church and State, and that under a Foreign Influence and Jurisdiction. We ought in all the Ways of Mildness and Humanity, to argue them out of their Prejudices; and to let them see, that whilst we confute their Errors, we have a Value and Love for their Persons: And this, I presume, would be one good way (and Experience has confirm'd it) of making them sensible of their Mistakes and Prejudices, and Reconciling them to our Persons, which might prove a good Step towards Embracing our Opinions. However, I mention'd our Divisions as one known Engin of the Papists to ruin us; And he that thinks they are so, will do all that in Conscience he can to compose them. If there be any who think otherwise, I know not what Religion they are of, and therefore have nothing to say to them.

To conclude. Since God has deliver'd our Ancestors from the horrid Destruction design'd on this Day: And has thereby preserv'd us to give him our due Tribute of Praise and Thanksgiving for this great Mercy; Let us endeavour to make this Sacrifice acceptable to him, by giving it with Hearts truly sensible of so undeserv'd a Blessing. We are not to imagine, that those who fell in that dismal Judgment, were greater Sinners than those who escap'd; No, but (the Lord spared them, and us in them, that his Goodness might lead us to a true Repentance of all our Sins: And they who harden their Hearts against the Impressions of the Divine Goodness, and make the Mercies of God an Argument for their Continuance in Sin, cannot be convinc'd of their Error; but by some of his severest Judgments: And then possibly, they would repent, when the Time of Mercy is past.

But I hope better Things of You, my Brethren ; who have such a mix'd Scene both of Judgments and Mercies, to oblige you to prepare your Hearts by a serious Repentance ; that your Vows and your Praises may ascend up to the Lord, and be return'd in new Favours and Blessings upon you and your Posterity. And let me beseech you to beware of turning this Grace of the Lord into Wantonness, and Affronting him with his own Blessings : We may be cheerful in the moderate Use of God's Creatures, whilst we are making our Acknowledgments for his Mercies : But to make them minister to Intemperance, is not to worship, but to defy the Almighty, and that in the most daring and provoking manner. Let us endeavour to convince our Popish Adversaries of the Truth of our Religion ; by shewing in our Lives and Actions, that its Influence is stronger to operate all that's Good in us, than theirs is to do Evil : And thus, instead of the Crooked and Peaccless Paths in which they blindly wander ; we shall find the Way to true Peace and Quiet of Soul here, and to that Happy Blissful Place, where there is Peace and Pleasure for evermore. Amen.
